DNA vaccines Vaccination consists of stimulating the immune system with an infectious agent, or components of an infectious agent, modified in such a manner that no harm or disease is caused, but ensuring that when the host is confronted with that infectious agent, the immune system can adequately neutralize it before it causes any ill effect.

Many DNA vaccines are injected into the muscle, however, a method using a "gene gun"™ is being developed that uses helium to propel DNA into the cells of the skin. If this is successful it will provide a "needle free"™ vaccine.

In this regard, in an attempt to improve DNA vaccines, optimization of the following tools should be addressed: 1) plasmid DNA vectors, 2) transgene sequence, 3) co-expression of stimulatory sequences, 4) vector delivery system, and 5) targeting of the vector for appropriate immune stimulation. 5.1.

DNA Vaccines Approach: From Concepts to Applications

First, DNA vaccines represent a simple and powerful concept: the coding sequence of an antigenic pathogen gene is incorporated into plasmid DNA, which will allow its expression in host cells. Thus, DNA vaccines circumvent the need for preparation, purification, and delivery of a pathogen or antigenic protein.

DNA vaccines alleviate the odds of the other vaccines by having good hold on both the faces of the immunity. The key to the success of DNA vaccine lies in the route of administration of the vaccine which can be done in many ways. Prime boost strategy is an approach used to boost the action of DNA vaccine.

The advances in the field of DNA vaccines in recent years have been profound. In 2003, the US Centers for Disease Control (CDC) expedited delivery of an experimental veterinary DNA vaccine developed by the CDC and manufactured by Aldevron (Fargo, ND) (Bouchie 2003).

GETTING DOWN TO THE ESSENTIALS. The key challenge for DNA vaccines is getting patients' cells to accept the introduced DNA. So far, the most effective technique seems to be electroporation "delivering short pulses of electrical current to the patient with the vaccine. The electricity creates temporary pores in a patient's cell membranes,...

INTRODUCTION DNA vaccine is DNA sequence used as a vaccine. DNA vaccination is a technique for protecting an organism against disease by injecting it with genetically engineered DNA to produce an immunological response. The direct injection of genetic material into a living host causes a small amount of its cells to produce the introduced gene ...

DNA vaccines against cancer. DNA vaccination has become an effective strategy for the development of vaccines against cancer, including cervical carcinoma (CC). Persistent infection with human papillomaviruses (HPV) is the main etiological factor in cervical cancer, the second most common cancer in women worldwide.

DNA vaccines are third generation vaccines. They contain DNA that codes for specific proteins (antigens) from a pathogen. The DNA is injected into the body and taken up by cells, whose normal metabolic processes synthesize proteins based on the genetic code in the plasmid that they have taken up.
